What did the Dolphin say to the diver?

That's a riddle that no one has been able to figure out. But researchers at Walt Disney World's Living Seas hope to uncover some of the secrets of dolphin language soon.

Visitors to The Living Seas will be able to witness the progress through large acrylic windows as the staff works with the dolphins to establish basic language and communications links. Underwater microphones will transmit the dolphin sounds to a sophisticated computer that will work to crack the language barrier.

The Walt Disney World Resort and United Technologies Corporation have combined state-of-the-art technology and imaginative concepts of tomorrow to create The Living Seas. It is the world's largest man-made coral reef environment, with 5.7 million gallons of seawater and 200 species of marine animals-more than 4,000 sea creatures in all.

An exhibit of more than 20 artifacts and photographs associated with the life of President Abraham Lincoln is now on display for a limited time at Disneyland Park in California.

Big Cheese In High Fashion

by Lorraine Santoli

You may see her wearing a quilted floral pullover with indigo denim jeans and red hightops or perhaps a cartoon print over a brightly colored skirt. Her accessories complement the look with hand-painted bangle braceles strings of beads and lacy cutoff gloves. At first, it may be a little difficult to accept that this image of high fashion (if only for a year) is our First Lady of Disney. Minnie Mouse.

Mickey's long-time sweetheart. liberated into the '80s, is ready to step into a spotlight of her own. Minnie's 1986 new look surfaced as a result of the Walt Disney Music Company's January release (through Disneyland/Vista Records and Tapes) of a new album. now available in your record store. titled, "Totally Minnie." This record introduces a much more contemporary. high fashion character. Jody Rubin, Corporate Coordinator for the "Totally Minnie" project, has become a close advisor to the world-famous mouse and explained, "The Music Company has always looked for public trends in which to get involved. That's how we came up with 'Mickey Mouse Disco,' a multi-platinum hit and Mickey's gold album winner, 'Mousercise,' Recently, we've seen the rise of a great many female recording groups, encompassing a whole fashion look and image. Minnie, who's been involved with music and dancing throughout her career, came to mind as someone we could focus on. She's always worn kind of fun clothes anyway, big yellow shoes, that sort of thing. We thought it was her turn to step into her limelight, and she agreed."

The album kicks off a yearlong, corporate-wide concentration on Minnie Mouse. "1986 will also see her star in music videos, a "Totally Minnie" parade at Disneyland, an NBC network television special of her own, public appearances nationwide and involvement in a contemporary apparel line."

The album and tape include 10 fast-paced. contemporary songs that entertain listeners of all ages. It opens with "Totally Minnie," sung by Brenda Russell, whose hits include according to Rubin.

"So Good, So Right" and "When I Give My Love to You."

The next selection is "Girl Talk." an amusing look at every modern girl's favorite pastime-talking on the telephone. Special performances by Minnie and Daisy Duck add to this musical conversation about boys. clothes and the latest crazes. Shaping up's more fun with "Minnie's Workout." A lively chorus suggests a get-fit activity for each day of the week. Daisy takes the limelight in "Dear Diary," a midtempo ballad featuring Daisy as an advice columnist who gives quacky answers to the lovelorn. The Disney girls, Minnie, Daisy and Clarabelle Cow put on an all-stops-out performance that closes side one in "Disney Girls Theme (All Fired Up.)"

Setting the pace on side two. "Hey Mickey" puts new lyrics to Tony Basil's 1982 hit. "Mickey" Next. popular song from Disney's 1960s film classic. "The Parent Trap" comes up next in a fun and refreshing pop-sound treatment. "Give All You've Got" closes the album with a punchy melody and lyric about positive thinking and being "all you can be" precisely Minnie's feelings for 1986

Minnie's new move into the forefront exposes her to many new and exiting ventures including the release of two must videos created from the album selections. "Hey Mickey" and "Totally Minnie: "Through these vehicles, Minnie will be "on-camera" to a tremendous audience via the Disney Channel, MTV and other cable and premium stations. "Since it is a tribute to Minnie's number one guy, it includes great color footage of him from many of his best films." said Rubin. "The footage used for the Totally Minnie' video was chosen from a variety of older black and white theatricals. "To make the entire look more contemporary, the Music Company has had it colorized via a process which involves actually handpainting the film. And although it's very costly and time-consuming, it looks beautiful. We want only the best for our star."

Minnie with Jody Rubin

And what about Mickey?
How does he feel about his girl friends new look?
"He's being very supportive through all of this."
Rubin stated. "He's still tops with her and will continue to be. Actually, I read a gossip column recently that said Minnie was dumping Mickey. I want to clarify that, it's just not true!"

Minnie of course, is not a newcomer to show business. Since her 1928 debut with Mickey in "Steamboat Wille: Disney's first synchronized sound cartoon, Minnie Mouse has been part of a show biz team that's as famous as Gable and Lombard, Burns and Allen and Rogers and Astaire.

As a singer, her vocal repertoire includes "Minnie's Yoo Hoo." from the cartoon "Mickey's Follies" (1929) which became the first Disney song released on sheet music in 1930. The tune was also used as the original theme for the Mickey Mouse Club and again in the "Tos for "The Mouse Factory," a Disney syndicated cartoon series. A 1933 Minnie tune, "Who! Buy a Lunch Box?" from "Building a Building," was also a popular success and was later published in various Disney song folios.

As an actress, Minnie has been known and loved for her role as Mickey's girl friend, equally at ease playing "straight man" to his comic escapades, damsel in distress to villainous Peg Leg Pete or taking a few comic turns herself. Altogether. Minnie's prodigious talents have shown in 71 Diency cartoons. Not only has the versatility of the mouse emanated from the motion for ure Screen but it has also delighted millions of fans at Disney Theme Parks. Greeting guests at Disneyland past." Rubin explained. You see people of every age wearing them." What she envisions for "Totally Minnie" is high fashion. The actual cut of the garment will be more trendy rather than just a sweatshirt," savs

Rubin. "There might also be new Totally Minnie' accessories such as stockings. jewelry, hair bows, gloves, perhaps a fresh scent cologne: all kinds of things that will be part of the look. We're even hoping to line up a shoe company."

Minnie's popularity in merchandise has been strong since the early '30s when Minnie plush dolls by Charlotte Clark, Steiff, Borgfeldt and Knickerbocker were first marketed. A McCall's pattern even allowed home sewers to create their own Minnie dolls. In 1935. Minnie joined Mickey on the famous hand-car toy which saved Lionel Trains from potential bankruptcy. During the past 50-plus years. she's appeared in and on a variety of items ranging from figurines and marionettes to iewelry, silverware, clothing and greeting cards. The first Minnie Mouse wristwatch came out in 1971, and today Minnie's image graces limited edition plates and Christmas ornaments as well In conjunction with her many new pursuits, Minnie will be involved in a variety of promotions, primarily in the Fall, when she stars in her own NBC television network special. "It will be one hour long," said

Rubin, "and include new animation and involve a lot of celebrities." In fact, Minnie plans to be spending more time at the Disney studios. "With the stepped-up production schedule, most every major star in Hollywood could well be there this year, and we'd like Minnie to stop by and say hello and perhaps have her picture taken with them.

Plans are also in the works for Minnie to make guest appearances on some of TV's top shows. 'Hopefully, we'll see her on 'The Tonight Show,'

Chae Joins Disney Dog Hall of Fame

by Margery R. Lee

Newest Star Thinks He Is a Dolphin

Trainer Gretchen Jacobs with Chae and friend

The Wait Disney Company has always championed worthy canine causes and celebrities. Consider the plight of those precocious pups in "101 Dalmations."

A playful pooch named Pluto was the first major animated dog star Obisney. To be followed by Dippy Dawg, a minor character in the 1932 carton, "Mickey's Revue," tound fame and fortune when he changed his name to "Gooty" Goofy had his first starring role in "Goofy and Wilbur" in 1939. He went on to demonstrate his athletic prowess in the 40s in films about skiling, surfing and riding horse-back. Today, as "Sport Goofy," he sponsors youth athletic tournaments around the world.

Then there was Bruno from "Cinderella," and the nurse dog, Nana, from "Peter Pan." And the appealing puppy love of "Lady and The Tramp." Plus Copper and Chief in "The Fox and The Hound."

Real live critters became the unforgetable heroes of "Old Yeller" (1952); "Greyfriars Bobby" (1961); "Nikki, Wild Dog of The North" (1961); "Big Red" (1962), and recently, Jed, in "The Journey of Natty Gann" (1985). "Chae," (rhymes with "sky") is the latest canine to join the Disney Dog Hall of Fame. In contrast with his canine cousins who have appeared in a movie or two, Chae is a live entertainer.

He appears almost daily at the new "Living Seas" attraction in Epcot Center at Walt Disney World. Chae is definitely Olympics material as a swimmer. The trouble is... he thinks he's a dolphin! He shares the spotlight with live dolphins in this six-milliongallon aquatic facility presented by United Technologies Corporation.

Originally adopted for the job of bodyguard by trainers Gretchen Jacobs and Dede Rector, Chae became so enamored with the idea of herding dolphins in cool, clean water as opposed to sheep on a dusty prairie, that he now serves as a surprise guest entertainer for Living Seas visitors.

Life was not always so luxurious for the puppy with the Australian background. When he was picked up by an animal shelter, his comic personality and joie de vivre made him the pet of all the human residents there.

Early last year, when a pair of young women behavioral psychologists visited the shelter in search of a watchdog, a mutt named "Bob" seemed to be qualified for the job.

Gretchen Jacobs remembers Bob as "a mutt mixture with a coat like a calico cat—all black, white, brown, gray, tan and red. Each paw was a different color."

For Walt Disney World, Jacobs and Rector had begun daily schooling in human-mammal communications with a pod of dolphins who were to join a research team in performing underwater tasks for the upcoming Living Seas. Bob, the border coille, had to give up his name to Bob, the dolphin, in the interest of eliminating confusion. Jacobs' husband Keith, suggested the name, "Chee," from Irish history origins, and Gretchen acreed. "Its exemed to fit him."

The first hint of a flaw in Chae's personally became evident within a few weeks. The puppy was introverted! Luckily, Jacobs, with a master's degree in psychology, was well-versed in teaching mentally handicapped children and was able to completely reverse this trait—which was definitely a handicap for a professionall watchdog.

With the heart of a brawe explorer, Chae was soon jumping in the training pool with six rambunctious dolphins, Katie, Geno. Toby, Twe. Christie and Bob. Their size intimidated him not at all. With his sheepdog instincts taking over, Chae frantically paddled around the dolphins—herding, chasing and sometimes doing an Australian crawl for safely! They teased him in return, bobbing up in front, behind and below this courageous creature, who weighs in at only 50 pounds, maybe more, soaking wet.

A serious health problem almost brought Chae's career to a tragic end.

Chae has nose-to-nose confrontation with a dolphin

After weeks of painful treatment, Chae's young heart recovered from a near-fatal disease, heartworm.

Upon his recovery, Chae was soon chasing his frisky friends at every opportunity. He had to be coached to refrain from jumping in the pool until he heard the command, "Playtime."

Chae's career skyrocketed upon the completion of The Living Seas tacility. He has been made an official member of the team of experts in marine biology, microbiology, oceanography, water chemistry and veterinary medicine. "He's our cheerleader," says Kym Murphy, the Walt Disney World Corporate Manager of Marine Technology, "working with us in demonstrating educational research projects to our quests."

You won't find Chae working every day, however, at The Sea's site. After all, a star has to protect his turnmy and tender skin from the adverse effects of salt water. DISNEY NEWS, however, tracked Chae down as he was drying himself in the Florida sun at the edge of the special training pool, while sipping from a can of cool water that had "The Paws Tha Refreshes" stenciled on the side. DN: Tell us something about your roots, Chae.

Chae: Well, I was born of mixed parentage (a male and a female from the alley side of town), but somehow I lost touch with my parents and ended up in an orphanage. Gretchen and Dede hired me as a bodyguard when I was about seven months old. I was kinda shy, I guess, but Gretchen helped me get over that. DN: Whatever made you think you could compete in swimming against a dolphin?

Chae: I admit they swim a lot faster than I, but I can do something they can't—paddle!

D.N.: Are you really communicating in some way with those guys when you're in the pool? Chae: I'd have to teach them to bark, first. We have some none-to-pose-once confrontations, but it's all infun. They tease me a lot, you know, and they let me herd them around the pool. with that self-satisfied grin on their faces! We're really good buddies, though. And I think Katle knows I'm attracted to her. D.N.: Do you live here at Epcot Center?

Chae. Yes, I share an apartment with Gretchen. After all, I'm still her bodyguard. And I need a place nearby to rest after my gig at The Living Seas. D.N.: Would you consider a movie role and possibly some of the glory your friend, Mike, of Beverly Hills, is enjoying right now?

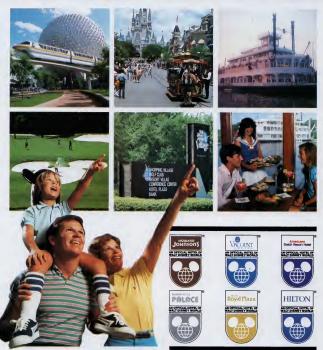

Chae: Naw. I'm doggone happy where I am. I get a hot tub bath and rubdown and a square meal in a round bowl every day. I've got my friends waiting for me down at the pool. And I love performing before an appreciative audience here. Fame and fortune isn't all that glamorous. I mean, I got a little tired of posing for the photographs for your magazine. I thought if that photographer yells "See the kitty! See the kitty!" one more time...I'd bite his ankle! No. no movie stardom for me...unless, of course, you hear of someone thinking about reviving an old Esther Williams' script.....

decided that Minnie's big Stars and Stripes Cookies were the best part of the quilting party. With watchful eyes and lots of enthusiasm, Kristen helped Minnie embroider the golden stars that add that final touch to the quilt. And to make sure the Liberty Quilt becomes a historical treasure of the occasion, everyone signed their names on the quilt. Minnie dated it July 4, 1986.

Minnie's Liberty Quilt is 45" x 45". It is made with red, white and blue ribbon and embroidered golden stars. The large emblems are appliqued with a sewing machine. Young quilters can easily learn the bold 1/4 inch spaced quilting stitch.

Il over America, everyone is celebrating the 4th of July with a special tribute to our beloved Lady Liberty. It is the Statue of Liberty's 100th Birthday. In the grand spirit of the occasion, Minnie Mouse designed this Liberty Quilt and invited some of her younger friends to share in the fun of making the quilt.

Sewing and quilting a Liberty Quilt was an exciting new experience for Minnie's group of friends. Karin and Heather learned to auilt with bold colorful stitches. John Outline again with zig-zag stitch, appliqueing emblems. Following diagram, and with a 1/4" seam allowance, sew ribbon stripes to small blue blocks; make 3 panels. Sew vertical ribbon stripes to appliqued blocks; make 2 panels. Sew all panels together to form pieced top. Pin and stitch blue border strips to all 4 edges of pieced top. Miter corners.

Measure finished size to pieced top. Cut backing fabric to matched dimensions of top. Lay batting on flat surface. Place quilt top directly on top, right side up. Place backing on top of the quilt top, right sides together. Stretch, smooth and pin layers together. Stitch all 4 edges, leaving a small opening for turning Turn quilt right side out. Whip-stitch to close.

For young quilters, a pattern should be marked with small dots on the fabric. Dots should be placed 1/4" from emblem edge and spaced 1/4" apart. The girls also quilted around white blocks. Gold stars and gold fringe are sewn on by hand.

DISNEY'S EXOTIC, ROBOTIC CAST

by Tom Fitzgerald

"GERO" STEALS THE SHOW AT EPCOT CENTER

Moments before showtime, the star is charged up and ready to go. He stretches his arms and neck, checks out the crowd, then resv-up his vehicle. For the next few minutes, hell chat with the folks, shake hands, perform a few musical numbers_even give a few lucky people a ride on the back of the scooter. His name is "GERO" and he's the newest, most sophisticated robot to join the Exot Center cast.

While GERO may be new to show-biz, robots are not. In fact, the word "robot" made its first appearance in a 1921 drama. "Rossums Universal Robots" But while the play put robots center stage the idea had been waiting in the wings for centuries, even before Aristotle's time.

Walt Disney saw examples of those ideas in the mechanized statues called "automatons" on the towers of Europe in the 1940s. He became entranced by an automaton of a singing bird in a gilded cage. He brought the mechanical bird back to the film studio, asking his machinists to figure out how the device worked. Walt was intrigued by the idea of three dimensional animation, and convinced that it would be ideally suited to another project on the drawing boards. Disneyland.

When the Magic Kingdom opened in 1955, mechanical animals wound up as performers in Disneyland attractions. Yet Walt wanted more...and challenged his staff to push the state-of-the-part

The space age technologies of miniaturized circuits and tape-actuated movements provided the breakthrough. Since the system combined sound and animation through electronics. Walt dubbed it "Audio-Animatronics: In 1963, the "Enchanted Tiki Room" introduced the first Audio-Animatronics show to Disnevland guests.

Throughout the years, Disney Imagineers have continued to improve the art of Audio-Animatronics... reaching new levels of sophistication with the walking figure of Ben Franklin in the "American Adventure" at Excot Center. But these crowd-pleasing figures are just a part of the robotic cast of Epcot Center.

One of the hottest acts in Future

World is General Motors BIRD & the Robot: Though Jersey-accented "Boyd" claims to be the headliner, the real scenestealer is "Tiger" a shy but animated manufacturing robot. Tiger's the kind of guy you'd expect to find building cars on assembly lines around the world.

In contrast to Tiger is a robot that's always playing around. His name is "SMRT-I" (propulated).

demonstration of an emerging computer technology known as speech recognition.

When guests speak by phone to SMRFI. he really listens! Computer circuits evaluate the answers, determining whether the reply given was "yes" or "no." Once that issue is settled, the logic department takes over, allowing SMRFI to astound and amuse his players.

Robots are also an integral part of "Horizons", presented by General Electric. From the wacky household servants envisioned by dreamers of yesteryear... to the hi-tech desert harvesters and manufacturing robots of the 21st century, robots will always be a part of our future.

"GERO" (short for "GE RObot"), is the newest robot to Join the Horizons cast...and he's destined to become one of Epcot's most beloved characters. "GERO is probably the most sophisticated entertainment robot in the world!" says Dave Fink of General Electric.

Designs for CERO originated at Walti-Disney Imagineering in California. Veteran animator Xavier "X" Atencio created the inspirational drawings using classic Disney character styling and proportions. CERO emerged from the drawing board as a fun-bown, friendly teen-ager—complete with a sporty scooter with room for riclest.

"The next step was to add the detailing that would give the robot a machined. hi-tech look," says Designer Gil Keppler. At the Walt Disney Studios, artisans sculpted the robot in plaster, then shipped it to Walt Disney World where its Lexan body was fabricated, assembled, and painted in metallic silver & gold. As for the vehicle color...well, it just had to be red. After all, GERO's a sporty gut?

While GERO's outward appearance was shaping up in Florida. scientists and technicians at the General Electric Research & Development Center were busily assembling the robot's inner workings.

Included in the 900-pound mountain of electronics are linear stepping motors, field effect transistor brakes, pulse-width modulated drives, incremental optical shaft encoder, fiber optics, laser disc player, 160 watts of biamped audio power and nine batteries—all controlled by 19 microcomputers!

Yet with all that hitech hardware three was one thing GERO Still didn't have—an education. It was time to go to school. At the GER & D Center computer technicians spent weeks raising the robot's IO from zero to GERO. By graduation time, GERO has deamed to shake hands, wave goodbye, drive his scooter, converse and sing songs! He was ready to meet his public.

The next time you visit Epcot Center, be sure to stop by and meet GERO, Jason, SMRT-1 and Tiger...just a few of the stars in Disney's exotic, robotic cast!

Gallery Program Displays Cultural Artifacts

by Les Perkins

An imperial lotus-blossom music box from the Forbidden City of China; a bullet-battered breastplate that once belonged to a Spanish conquistador marching through Mexico; meticulously hand-painted Japanese kites, colorfully displaying traditional designs: the festive accountement of a Fasi (Fez) wedding in Morocco.

How far around the world would you have to travel to glimpse such rare and exotic artifacts? Well, you need travel no farther than the Walt Disney World Vacation Kingdom in Florida. One of the little-known surprises of a visit to Epcot Center is the discovery of the World Showcase Gallery Attractions.

Located within the Showcase countries around World Showcase Lagoon are four museum-quality galleries. Changing exhibits of authentic art objects gathered from around the world are housed in elegant appropriatelythemed environments equivalent to display areas of the most prestigious museums

Assembling, protecting and exhibiting these valuable collections is no small task. Even more astonishing, however. is the entire concept of presenting quality shows of cultural artifacts in a "Theme Park" setting.

The Disney equivalent of an "Indiana Jones" who searches out these rare treasures is fine arts expert Van Romans. He is the Director of Exhibit Planning at Walt Disney Imagineering headquarters in Glendale, California, Romans originated and now supervises the Gallery Program.

When I first attempted to acquire legitimate artifacts for the Mexico Pavilion in 1982" explains Romans "I had a lot of doors slammed in my face. Now we have a history of important shows. We've also proven that we ensure utmost care of the objects, so we're getting much more cooperation and respect from the international art community." In 1983, an outstanding exhibit premiered at the China Pavilion Gallery. It was called "A Thousand Years of Chinese Tomb Sculpture" and featured full-sized sculptures recently unearthed from the royal burial chambers of ancient dynasties within the People's Republic of China. Included was a painted pot more than 4.000 years old!

Our current show in the China Gallery is equally as impressive," says Romans enthusiastically. "It's called "Treasures of the Forbidden City. More than 50 examples of imperial artifacts are on loan from the Palace Museum in Beijing, China, What's most exciting is that these objects have never been on view outside of the Forbidden City before. And we've got them at Epcot Center!

You can't imagine how monumental the negotiations were-international agencies, meetings in China, and dealing with different cultures. But executives at the Palace Museum wanted the pieces to be shown at Epcot Center because more people would be able to see them here than anywhere else in the world" Due to the popularity of this show, the Palace Museum recently agreed to extend the loan until October. Yang-Boda, the Vice-director of the museum, stated, "The exhibition plays a certain role in promoting the understanding and cultural Another recent addition to World Showcase is "Feather On The Wind-The Art of Japanese Kites," hosted in part by Mitsukoshi. As with several of the other galleries, a beautiful catalog and poster of the exhibition have been created. The kite catalog is available from the Mitsukoshi Department Store in the Japan Showcase.

In the Japan Pavilion Bijutsu-kan Gallery, guests find a delightful array of handmade kites from more than a dozen regions of Japan. Exciting kite battles from Japanese kite-festival games are highlighted in a video show that plays continuously in the gallery.

The fourth gallery attraction at Epcot Center is the Gallery of Arts and History in the Morocco Showcase. Featured there are Islamic pieces dating back more than 600 years, as well as fine examples of Berber iewelry and pottery. The Moroccan government was happy to assist with the installation of the show.

As Romans is quick to point out, "all of these items on display tell how people lived-how they worshipped, what they believed in and what was important to them in their time.

From the elegance of the Mexican costumes, we sense the class structure in that society. Symbols on a stone cross convey how another religion was introduced into the pagan. Indian culture of Mexico. Through their handicrafts, we glimpse the harshness of daily living in Morocco: the importance of tradition in Japan.

They are terrific!"

"It is our hope," concluded Romans, "that our Epcot Galleries serve to intrigue and entertain our guests by presenting cultural pieces in a new way to those who might otherwise be reluctant to visit a traditional museum." One visiting family stated its reaction to the gallery attractions quite simply:

Mickey Mouse works his magic again

Remember this scene from "Fantasia"? It's the one in which Mickey used magic to bring life to a flock of floor mops so they could do his job of mopping the floor. However, the mops got out of control and flooded the place.

Now Mickey is working his magic again-but this time everything is under control. Because both Mickey and his mops are porcelain figures. "Mickey Mouse in Fantasia" is the latest in the Disney series created by outstanding Italian sculptor Enzo Arzenton. The characters are so "alive" that they put a magical spell on almost everybody who sees them.

You can see Mickey Mouse and the entire Disney series which now includes Donald Duck, Pinocchio, Snow White, The Sleeping Beauty and Cinderella at the retailers listed here. All are limited editions - so we suggest you get around to seeing Mickey and his friends before other Disney collectors take them home.

CHARACTER INSIGNIA BOOSTED MILITARY MORALE

Studio Answered Call For Distinctive Emblems

Walt Disney's cartoon characters were already renowned for bringing humor and joy to worldwide audiences even before the outbreak of World War II. But when war erupted, the Disney Studio rallied to the victory causeproducing training films, war-themed cartoons and newspaper comics relating to the citizen hardships at home. Goofy starred in "Victory Vehicles," promoting the saving of gasoline and scrap metal. Not many people know that seven hundred members of an antiaircraft unit were quartered at the Studio in December 1941. Walt produced "Victory Through Airpower," a cartoon film which extolled the strategic value of airpower, which was screened for Winston Churchill and President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mickey, Donald and many other Disney characters helped sell war bonds. But the average serviceperson remembers the characters as symbolic subjects for over 1,200 military insignia for the U.S. and our Allies.

Walt's cartoon characters served their hitch in training camp and battle at the request of the Air Force, Army, Navy and Marine Corps

Mother Nature was the enemy at many stateside military bases

Former staff assistant Lillian Blanchard, of the Studio Story Department, was a corporal in the United States Marine Corps Women's Reserve (they called them WRs for short) She recalls with displeasure the searing heat of El Centro Marine Corps Air Station in California where the Marines were ad-

instructed to wear a hat at all times while outdoors, "Sometimes the control columns of the bombers which were exposed to the sun were too hot for pilots to touch and they wore gloves" Blanchard said. "Several W.R.s were given EPD (Extra Police Duty) because crickets were found 'adrift' under their bunks" she remembered

Blanchard also remembers when two other W.R.s stationed at the bugplagued base, decided to ask Walt Disney for an exclusive insignia for their squadron, hopefully to help boost their morale.

PFC Dorothy Cunningham and Pvt. Beverly Spencer composed a poem as a request and sent it to Walt in the month following V-Day (June 6, 1944):

Disney animators answered the request with a caricature of a lady cricket in mechanic's coveralls toting a pair of pliers...a wrench and fly swatter at the ready. Needless to say, the Women Marines of Aviation Squadron Three were thrilled to sew their distinguished new patches on their work clothes (they were not officially allowed on their dress uniforms).

Hank (Henry)
Lyon I Porter came to Disney in Juneo (1936 as a publicity artis. From 1937-1940, he pencilled and inked Sunday comic pages. When World War II broke out.
Walt assigned a five-man staff, including Porter, to handle designing military insignia. Veteran Disney animator/producer/writer Ward Kirmball remembers that Porter was about six feet eight inchest tall, drove a "Roosevelt" make car and, with his huge hands, played a mean andtime piano. Porter died in 1951.

Porter's imagination was sometimes taxed to the limit. Although there was a myriad of bugs birds and beasts in the Disney menagerie, there were no fish included. So Porter dreamed up all the fish emblems required by submarine outfits. He also answered a request from the Seabees for a "deliciously fermining queen bee, with rosebud lips, devy bedroom eyes and an atomizer to make her deadlier than the male."

The late Roy Williams (who later became the TV's Big Mooseketeer with the Mickey Mouse Club) created the original insignia for the legendary pilots first called the American Volunteer Group. It was a winged tiger flying through a large "V" for victory. A subsequent re-design of that emblem became the official Flying Tigers' symbol of the 14th Air Force, approved on August 6, 1943. Although General Claire Lee Chennault gave Williams credit for the tiger design. Williams said, "I did the original and rough design, but artist Hank Porter did the finished drawing."

Another artist, Ollie Johnston, who was the animation director for "Fantasia" has faint memories of creating a patch for the Air Force..." a cute gal in a cocktail apron."

Most, but not all, of the Disneydesigned milliary insignia, involved the most popular Disney characters. Donald Duck was the favorite—his feisty, combative personality making him wellsuited for representing wartime units. Next was Pluto used in about 10 percent of all designs, and third was Mickey Mouse, who graced about 4 percent. Other characters found themselves used appropriately, such as Prinocchio's conscience, Jiminy Cricket: representing a chaplain's unit. Thumper, Dumbo and Dopey, too. became mascots for U.S. fighting forces.
Each original insignia design cost an estimated whopping 525, with Disney donating them all free of charge to the Armed Forces. Many units in the Vietnam War such as Special Forces, First Cavalry Division Airmobile and the Second Vietnamese Army Division sported Disney-designed crests.

As good luck pieces and symbols of determination, courage and skill, while also portraying the sense of humor of the U.S. serviceman and woman, these emblematic drawings have taken their place in history as mementos and identifications in the battle annals of almost every branch of service. THE GREAT MOUSE DETECTIVE

An "El

mentary" Task for Disney Animators

by Jim Fanning

here something sinister afoot traught daughter turns for help to the Victorian era's greatest detective, who agrees to unravel the baffling mystery. What sounds like a classic Sherlock Holmes' thriller is actually the storyline of Walt Disney Pictures' 26th animated feature. "The Great Mouse Detective." starring mouse counterparts of Holmes and Dr. Watson living under the famous flat at 221 B Baker Street. The mousesize sleuth is named Basil and his intellect more than matches that of the legendary Sherlock, Basil's faithful friend, Dr. Dawson, outdoes even Watson in the loyalty department.

A twisting tale of fun and excitement. "The Great Mouse Detective" takes the two intrepid mice from the sewers of London to a rowdy barroom. to high atop Big Ben's tower in search of the missing toymaker.

This latest addition to a long line of cartoon classics is the handiwork of the "new generation" of Disney animators. The production team, headed by producer Burny Mattinson, who also directed along with Dave Michener, John Musker and Ron Clements. fashioned Basil's adventures in the same lighthearted vein as "The Rescuers" and "101 Dalmatians." 'There's a combination of Sherlock Holmes and James Bond elements with a little Alfred Hitchcock thrown in- said Ron Clements.

The story of "The Great Mouse Detective" was developed from the book "Basil of Baker Street" by Eve Titus. Even though this popular children's novel provided the basic material, it took the Disney team three years to develop the screen story.

In creating "The Great Mouse Detective," the animators drew inspiration from the original Sherlock Holmes stories by Sir Arthur Conan Dovle. Great care was taken in delineating the personalities of Basil and Dawson. "We didn't want to simply make them miniature versions of Basil Rathbone and Nigel Bruce," explains Clements, referring to the stars of the Sherlock Holmes movies of the 1940s.

Animator Rob Minkoff reveals another "role model" for Basil. "Leslie Howard's portraval of Henry Higgins in the film version of 'Pvgmalion' was the springboard for the character

Dr. Watson is often portraved as a blundering dimwit, but the Disney team avoided that stereotype in their portrayal of Watson's mouse counterpart, "Dawson's not a buffoon," comments Ron Clements, "He's a foil for Basil but he's also a warm. caring person:

Although the "real" Sherlock Holmes inspired the film's creators, the famous sleuth himself hardly appears in "The Great Mouse Detective" "We wanted to do it totally in this miniature mouse world," says Ron Clements. "Humans are in this story only as backdrops."

The personality and delivery of an actor providing a character's voice is a key element in developing the character into an entertaining, appealing figure. "The vocal performance is one of the things that directs the animator the most," comments Rob Minkoff, "The actor gives the character so much color just by the way he delivers a line."

The casting of Vincent Price as the villainous voice of Ratigan was a breakthrough in bringing the character to life. "Ratigan was one of the characters we didn't have a handle on." admits Burny Mattinson. "Then I remembered this movie I always liked.

Basil hides in a toy shop, hot on the trail of that dirty rat, Ratigan

A The evil Ratigan, whose voice is supplied by Vincent Price

B Holdina Olivia up for ridicule

C Basil and his assistant, Dawson, go undercover D Basil offers a clue to a towering bloodhound

E Fidget, Ratigan's henchman, pens a ransom note F Olivia is sweet, but a nuisance to Basil Champagne For Caesar: In it. Vincent Price was this outrageously funny. biggerthan-life cad. We knew he was our guy! "He had a great time doing it. It's a different side of Vincent Price!" Ron Clements recalls.

Barrie Ingham's vocal performance as Basil was another mother lode of inspiration for the animators. Observed Producer Mattinson, "Out there on the recording stage he was flamboyant in the way he said things."

By contrast. Val Bettin, the mellow voice of steadfast Dr. Dawson, reminds Mattinson of Henry Travers, the mildmannered character actor of the 30s and 40s.

The casting of the voice of little Olivia was a particular challenge. The search for a young actress to vocally express the humor of the character was a long one. "We wound up finding a little gif in Glasgow. Scotland." says Mattinson. "We recorded Susanne Pollasschek in London. She had no formal training, but she did a beaufful loib."

A really tight deadline drew the staff closer together. Says Mark Henn, "the enthusiasm started from the top and went all the way to the last cel painter."

And what do the creators think of their creation? "Se far as having entertaining, likeable characters who seem real and touch you a little bit, think it's the best we've done in a decade" comments Mike Gabriel. "The foundations of Disney are likeable characters in a good story," concludes John Musker. "and "The Great Mouse Detective" has that:"

You can see this latest example of quality character animation in the grand tradition of Walt Disney when "The Great Mouse Detective" opens nationwide this summer.

HARPER GOFF REMEMBERS...

by Betsy Richman

As one of a small group of artists selected by Walt Disney to work on concepts for the development of Disneyland, Harper Goff still feels at home there. I't didn't start out being named Disneyland, though," he says. "Walt referred to his initial idea as "Walt referred to his initial idea as America." a carry-over from an idea for a kiddle park with a pony ride and American-themed miniatures he'd envisioned for the land across the street from the Studio."

After training at Chouinard Art Institute, Goff became a set designer at Warner Brothers and a freelance magazine illustrator. Among his film credits at the time were "Destination Tokyo," "Objective Burma;" "A Midsummer Night's Dream;" "Sergeant York;" "Anthory Adverse," and the Errol Flynn classic, "Captain Blood" met Walt in Europe in 1950, at the Bassett-Lowke Ltd. shop in London when I was there on a trip for several studios. We were interested in purchasing the same antique locomotive model train," says Harper. "He'd seen it first, so after he purchased it, we got to talking. I explained to him that I wasn't an animator, that I was a liveaction man, and he then told me about a little project he had up his sleeve, Walt Disney's 'America.' Little did I know that that would become Disneyland, or that I would play a major role in its development.

"Wall's attitude towards the people be worked with was really refreshing. Before Disney, I worked for Mervyn LeRoy, Michael Curtiz and Max Benihardt; they were always Mr. LeRoy, Mr. Curtiz and Mr. or Herr Reinhardt. The day I started working for Wall Disney, he called me Harper, and when I called him Mr. Disney, He said. Who's Mr. Disney? He insisted on the use of the first name, and it went a long way towards making everyone feel more at ease."

One of Goff's first projects at the Studio was "Newty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." Walt Disney conceived of the film as an animated project, and asked Harper to develop a storyboard for the project." I didn't do cartoon drawing," says Harper. "The storyboard I devised rendered the film in live-action—and that's the way Walt decided to go with it." The film achieved international acclaim in addition to two Academy Awards for art direction and special effects.

"That film opened in 1954" says Goff, "I'd also been involved in the evolution of the Disneyland idea. Walt asked several guys to do some concepts for it, in great secreey, and none of us knew the others were working on the project. I did a casual version of Main Street, with a barber shop, a blacksmith shop, and a newspaper stand, very small-town America.

"One thing I remember about Walt at that time in connection with Disneyland was a worry that we would go over budget—he'd mortgaged everything to the hilt to build it. People would go to him with reports of me or some other designer being over budget, and he'd reply, When he's over budget, he'll mention it to me.'

Walt had this trust in people, you see, really quite remarkable for the pressure he was under at the time."

During the construction of Disneyland, Goff and Walt would frequently meet in the hub, where they would climb a construction rigging for an aerial view of Disneyland's progress. "One day, several months from opening, we were up there and Walt urned to me and said, "You know, I've spent 58% of the total budget already, and there isn't one thing you'd call terrific out there right now." says Goff. "What we were looking at that day were the sewer systems. mounds of dirt from the river path of what would become Rivers of America. all the expensive, innovative support systems we'd designed into Disneyland. Walt didn't see any show, and that bothered himonly momentarily, though, Before the opening, he was nervous but happy with all the wonderful things he knew people would enjoy out there."

Wall and Goff would frequently drive down from the Studio together to supervise the construction of Disneyland. "When I think of Walt, I think of those conversations we had in the car" says Goff. "He didn't want to talk business. We talked about interesting things we'd seen on travels, or he'd clue me in on projects he was just beginning to dream about, like the Cal Arts School. On those days, I dg ohome and my mind would be full of ideas Walt had let out of the bag. He had a talent for getting people excited about things."

Editor's Note. Harper Goff resides in Palm Springs, California and is sometimes called in as a consultant for The Walt Disney Company

WALT DISNEY HOME VIDEO

Following her critically acclaimed role in "Down and Out in Beverly Hills." Bette Midler has wrapped up work on her second Touchstone Films release, "Ruthless People." This time Midler plays a shrewish wife who is abducted by a couple of amateur kidnappers. But the kidnappers have a problem on their handsher millionaire husband doesn't want his wife back and they can't wait to get rid of her.

Dannu DeVito with those "Ruthless People"

The contemporary comedy also stars Emmy Award winner Danny DeVito of "Taxi," and Judge Reinhold ("Off Beat") and is directed by David Zucker, Jim Abrahms, and Jerry Zucker, the team which directed the highly successful "Airplane." "Ruthless People" is due out this summer.

Cheers for star Shellu Lona

Shelly Long ("Cheers") stars in the upcoming comedy-thriller from Touchstone Films. "Outrageous Fortune." This comedy involves two women who are brought face to face in the moraue to identify a man they've both fallen for but find that it isn't his body after all. The plot is set in motion when they decide to track down their "boyfriend" and force him to choose between them.

Art Carney took one of cable television's ton honors when he was named Best Actor at the Awards for Cable Excellence (ACE) ceremony for his performance in The Disney Channel's "The Undergrads." The Channel won a second award when "DTV." its acclaimed music video program, was named Best Music Series. "DTV" combines classic Disney cartoons and animation with pop music from the last four decades. The ACE awards are given annually by The National Academy of Cable

Programming. "Le Disney Channel" was given "Le 7 d'or." France's equivalent of the Emmy Award, for best family entertainment program of the year. "Le Disney Channel," a two-hour compilation of the cable network's U.S. programming. is seen weekly on Channel 3 throughout France

Veteran superstars Burt Lancaster and Kirk Douglas are currently filming Touchstone Films' "Tough Guys," a contemporary comedy-adventure. The film marks the re-teaming of Lancaster and Douglas who, in addition to the legendary careers they have enjoyed separately, have been previously seen together in such classic motion pictures as "Gunfight at the O.K. Corral" and "Seven Days in May."

Tough Guys" chronicles the comic exploits of a pair of notorious robbers who face the strange new world of Los Angeles in the 1980s when they are released from jail after 30 years.

Charles Durning and Alexis Smith also star. The film is scheduled for a Fall theatrical release.

Hayley Mills match-making-again?

Hayley Mills reprises her dual role as twins caught in a match-making scheme in "The Parent Trap II" on The Disney Channel, Walt Disney Productions' 1961 theatrical release, "The Parent Trap" is the inspiration for this comical sequel, which also stars Tom Skeritt and Alex Harvey.

"The Parent Trap II" marks the seventh Disney film for Mills and the first she has made for cable television.

Bob gives a hopeful hug to lane Russell

The Disney Channel has acquired the exclusive rights to nine comedy classics starring Bob Hope, America's favorite funnyman. which will air under the banner of "Bob Hope Theatre." A different film will premiere on the Channel every two weeks throughout the summer. Movies scheduled to air include "Son of Paleface," "The Road to Rio," "The Seven Little Foys" and "The Road to Bali."

BLUE BAYOU

by Margery R. Lee

The charm of the beautiful city of New Orleans includes its renowned Cajun and French cuisine.

A similar dining experience awaits Disneyland guests in the Blue Bayou Restaurant tucked away within the graceful confines of New Orleans Square. The setting is reminiscent of the early days of Louisiana when festive gatherings were held in stately mansions and cotton was still "king." Overhead lanterns lend a gardenparty atmosphere and frogs and crickets sing out evening greetings in this otherwise tranquil bayou.

You may want to warm yourself with Potage de Coquilles a la Nouvelle-Orleans (New Orleans Square Clam Chowder) before encountering the nearby rampaging "Pirates of the Caribbean." You'll see boats laden with "Caribbean" guests slipping silently by amidst shadowy mossladen trees where fireflies dart to and fro

Many diners prefer Poitrine De Volaille Aux Champignons (chicken breast stuffed with mushrooms). Others delight in the Caiun Jambalava dish, which is a spicy casserole of ham, sausage and shrimp blended with vegetables and okra made the Louisiana way.

The Sandwich Monte Cristo (sliced) turkey, ham and Swiss cheese, dipped in batter and fried to a golden brown), however, remains the favorite of most. This very filling specialty is much more than a mere sandwich, as you will see when you try one at home, using the recipe below.

Sandwich Monte Cristo

- 11/2 cups all-purpose flour
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1 tablespoon baking powder
- 11/3 cups milk

1 egg Sandwich:

- 1 oz slice cooked white turkey meat
- 1 oz slice pullman ham
- 1 oz. slice Swiss cheese
- 2 slices white bread

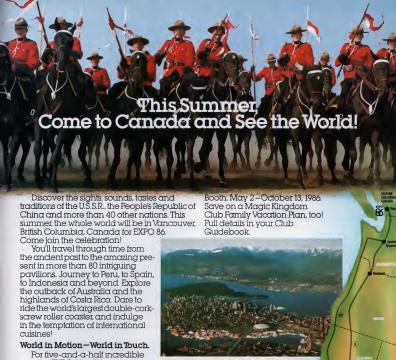

New Orleans' atmosphere prevails outside Blue Bayou

Sift flour, salt and baking powder together. Add milk to beaten egg and add flour mixture. Mix well. (Makes two sandwiches.)

Place turkey, ham, and cheese slices between two slices of white bread with the cheese in the middle. Cut sandwich in half diagonally. Use toothpicks to hold sandwich together. Dip sandwich in egg batter and fry in 350 degree cooking oil until golden brown. Remove toothpicks, sprinkle sandwich with powdered sugar. Serve with a fruit compote and syrup or jelly if desired. Serves one.

Flamboyant circus-king John Ringling always had to have the best—and biggest—of everything. His circuses were called the "World's Greatest Shows" and "The Greatest Show on Earth." His huge Sarasota, Florida mansion, Cad'Zan, was magnificent. His yacht, Symphonia, was incredibles.

But Ringling's greatest extravagance was saved for his hotel, the Sarasota Ritz-Carlton. Unfortunately for Ringling, his dream crumbled along with the Florida land boom of the 1920s, and his crowning achievement was never finished.

Never finished, that is, until the Arvida Corporation set about building a contemporary version of John Ringling's fabulous hotel.
